The learning diary should include at least the following sub-areas:

- Analyzing different situations or issues faced by the student during the training period, that include interaction, ethics, decision making, developing etc.
- Describing your own learning experiences, and identifying your own strengths and development areas
- Evaluating your own role in the workplace
- Analyzing your own professional growth and development challenges

The learning diary is a tool for continuous evaluation and a platform for recording new ideas. In addition to written text, you are highly recommended to include your own concept maps, pictures, drawings etc. You can also ask feedback from your tutor during the practical training period and add them to your learning diary.

In a good learning diary you:

- Reflect the working experiences to your own learning objectives
- Analyze your own role and learning experiences in the work community
- Recognize important learning points, and identify your own development areas

Number of pages approximately 3-5 pages.

Practical training guidance

Return your learning objectives to your tutor (deadline).

Your tutor will give you written feedback based on your learning diary.

Enjoy your training period!
